WHEN the "heaven in his blindness bows down to wood and stone," a Dallas, Texas, minister-cameraman—is going to be on hand to film him and reform him.

Driving a flivver the Rev. A. G. Garr, Adventist minister, has set forth on a world's tour which will carry him to places where the gospel has never been preached and no camera has ever clicked. His chief luggage is a moving picture camera.

"I am going to places in China, the Fiji Islands, the backwoods of Australia, and the jungles of darkest Africa," declares Dr. Garr. "I am going to preach the gospel and take moving pictures of the heathen worshipping their idols before conversion and then picture them when they have accepted Christianity."

Dr. Garr expects to be gone for a matter of ten years or so.

Light Number at Nelson.

Dorothy Dalton, appears in a decidedly new character in "Hard Boiled," which comes to the Nelson theatre today. In this story, written by John Lynch, she has a part that mingles comedy and pathos. She is the light, frivolous musical comedy star stranded in a country town and she is compelled to get some kind of work or starve. The handling of this characterization was entrusted to the capable directorship of Victor L. Schertzinger, who recently has been directing the plays of Charles Ray.

The small town setting naturally brings into the action of the story a variety of types, always material for the creation of wholesome comedy. So Corinne Melrose, the character played by Miss Dalton, finds she has to deal with the rural theatre owner, the skinflint money lender, the village gossip, the local Beau Brummel, etc. A kindly old woman takes the singer into her home when she is stranded. She repays this kindness by saving her benefactress from the wiles and designs of grasping small town enemies.

Unique Title for Good Drama.

The five-reel Universal entitled "Kiss or Kill," which is the Dixie's special traction, develops a story rather stronger than is promised in the opening situations. It is one of those pleasant stories of the near-crook type, which mingle the probable and improbable in swift-running fashion. There is almost a touch of comedy at times in certain of the dramatic situations, but it never passes the danger point, and toward the close of the story there are some agreeable surprises which round it up very well.

Herbert Rawlinson plays the role of Jack Warren, a young man just discharged from military service in New York city. He is "on his uppers," and in a moment of desperation snatches a pocketbook from a man on a corner. He then flees and enters the home of a man named Middleton. The latter, a wealthy gentleman, protects Jack from the police, and later employs him to recover a certain paper which had been stolen by his nephew. Jack accepts this commission and soon comes in contact with the nephew, Craig, who is trying to impose his love on a girl named Ruth Orton. Jack eventually recovers the stolen paper and also the will, which disposes of the fortune left by Ruth's father. Both Middleton and Craig are shown to be criminals and Jack also wins the girl.

Priscilla Dea has very pleasing as Ruth, though the part does not make any great demands upon her. Harry Carter is again interesting in his special style of villainy, as Craig. In fact, the work of the three principals is so well balanced and enjoyable that it lifts the production to the point of strong entertainment value.

Corking Comedy at Princess.

The attraction at the Princess today, "The Pest," with Mabel Nori in the leading role is a comedy act, in the first part at least, will keep any house-full roaring with laughter. The "Pest" is a rural slavey, and runs a flatboat ferry which furnishes a deal of amusement. But the picture is built up on a melodramatic plot and most of the laughter compelling situations have a touch of pathos and bring out the heroine's character sympathetically. She is charming and lovable, and perhaps one of the most pleasing portrayals Mabel Normand has done in a long while.

The slavey is shown in the end to be the daughter of the local rich man, and the girl who is thought to be his daughter is the child of the slavey's supposed parents. There are a number of characters in the plot, and while it serves mostly as a comedy vehicle, it has a bit of good story.

Billy Malone's in Town.

Jumping from Atlanta is not a nice mid-summer stunt for a musical comedy company like Billy Malone's, but they managed to do it, and are ready for the opener at the Hipp this afternoon. Billy is on the job, giving all kinds of directions, and perspiring more than the stage hands who are doing the work. He has a fine personality, and seems cock sure he has a corking good show, one that will send the first house away advertising for him. The various members of the company can be seen scanning the classified columns for light house-keeping rooms, etc., as the company is a stock of the musical type, and may be here for two or more weeks. Malone carries his own musical director, so the production will not be marred by the difficulties which beset Anderson last week. The opening bill is "The New Chef," a roving laugh getter from Broadway, where it made former records look small. A Chaplin comedy is also on the program, "Who Got Stung" being the title.

MRS. BROWN'S DOLLAR.
Good Mrs. Brown desired to buy
A simple little blouse;
She wanted one that wasn't high
To wear around the house.
At first she thought she'd send away

To some big city store,
For here perhaps she'd have to pay
At home a nickel more.

But Mrs. Brown is rather wise;
She took a second thought;
She knew that here before her eyes

She'd see before she bought
Perhaps a nickel difference
In prices there might be—
And maybe fully fifty cents
In looks and quality.

She thought she'd see what in the town
The dealers had to sell,
And so that morning she went down

To shop a little spell,
And she was glad that not in haste

She sent her cash away;
She paid a dollar for a waist
She found upon display.

But here is what she never knew (Though happen oft it will):
The dollar that she handed to
The clerk to pay the bill

Before the afternoon was paid
To someone in the town
And, in the course of daily trade,
At last to Mr. Brown.

That night, when supper she had cooked,
She wore her garment new.
Brown told her 't was enough she looked

To kiss—and did it, too.
In fond embrace he held her near
To take another smack
And said, "I little present, dear!"
She got her dollar back!
